WISDOM

In business, a little empathy goes a long way. At times, it takes mental role-playing to understand where somebody else is coming from. If you're in sales, putting yourself in the other person's shoes should be an automatic reaction. But instead of focusing on how closing the sale will benefit the customer, too many salespeople are focusing on the commission they'll get. Think in terms of what's good for the other person and success will seek you out.

Administrative Professionals' Week

April 20 - 26, 2014

Here are some great ideas to recognize Administrative Professionals and boost your sales at the same time.

- At local offices offer to come in and give the gals a pampering session. Spa treatment, Satin Hands, Mini Makeover, etc. Of course you can suggest that the boss purchase a gift certificate for them to spend during the pampering session.
- Offer to wrap and deliver anything they may want to give. Add balloons and make it beautiful.
- Call the wives of the men who have assistants. We all know that they do the shopping anyway.
- Don't forget your husband's office. Send different things for the holidays.
- Offer gift certificates that could be given out at their luncheon and used for anything they like.
- Visit local offices with single stem flowers and attach certificates for a makeover and $5-10 in free product at the time of the makeover. (Make sure this is ok with management first.)
- Don't forget to offer something for the men too. There are lots of men in these positions as well.
